

WINDMILLS ON THE FARM.

Comparative Cheapness of This Power For Pumping Water—Steel Mills.

The fact that in some sections of the country nearly every farm has its wind-mill indicates the popularity of this power for elevating water. It is true that the wind cannot be depended upon to work the mill for more than six or eight hours a day on an average, and that sometimes entire days may pass when there is not enough air in motion to turn the mill. This is, to be sure, a serious fault, while partial if not entire destruction of the mill may result from a high wind, but against this we must place the comparative cheapness of this power, both so far as the first expense is concerned as well as the cost of running

Although the purpose for which wind engines are best adapted is the pumping of water as it can be stored in tanks or reservoirs for use when there is not sufficient motion in the air to turn the mill, they have other uses to which they are fairly well adapted, such as the grinding of grain, the cutting of wood and hay and the running of light machinery of various kinds. Pump an abundance of water for use in the kitchen and for the stock and also sufficient for watering a small lawn and a garden. Unless some better method of elevating water is available, no farmhouse or country resi dence should be without its windmil and pump.

One of the most serious objections to windmills is that in high winds they often suffer serious damage, the wheel in some cases being torn to pieces, while in others the entire mill is blown down.

To be a success a mill must be strong enough to withstand any ordinary wind. and at the same time be light and so easy running that it will turn in a light wind. Windmills as made in this coun try are getting beyond the experimental

The old form of Dutch windmill gen-erally had four large and wide sails, but the early American forms used mills with wheels carrying a large number of narrow wooden slats. This is the form that is in most common use perhaps to-day, but with the low price of iron and steel the narrow wooden slats have in some of the newer forms of mills given place to a smaller number of iron wings There is a growing demand for the stee windmills which are made with single double or triple motion, as is desired. When the wind is light, the single motion may not be able to turn, while the double or triple motion mill can do a large amount of work, explains a writer in American Gardening, which illus-trates one of these steel windmills at work. The mills and towers are galvan ized after they are completed, and should run for many years without expense for repairs. Where they can be used for any other purposes than pumping water it will generally be best to get a geared

Work In the Potato Field.

Work In the Potato Field.

Constant and thorough cultivation from the time Irish potatoes are uniformly through the ground until the tops are too large to admit of working among the rows without injury to the plants has been the general practice of all successful growers of the potato, and especially of those who produced the great prize crops in the American Agriculturist competition. The crops in these prize competitions were cultivated or heed upon an average three times. Cultivation was continuous throughout the menth of June and so far into July as it was possible to work among the rows was possible to work among the rows without injury to the tops.

The first cultivations were with horse implements, generally with shallow culture at first and deeper subsequently. Six inches is regarded as deep culture, three inches as shallow. As the growth of tops increased, the only cultivation on the prize crops was with the hand hoe, great care being taken to in no way bend down, disturb or injure the tops.

Both flat culture and hilling up were practiced, with no marked predomi nance of evidence in favor of either sys-tem. Both gave large yields, both have many advocates, both are employed. Generally, however, level culture is regarded as the better practice. In a very wetseason the hilling system may possi-bly give better results, according to American Agriculturist.

Comb Honey For Market.

It is important that the first lot of sec tions be put on at the proper time, for, if they are not, the amount of honey secured from any given colony will be greatly reduced. If put on too early, the brood is apt to be chilled or breeding retarded. If put on too late, the bees will have begun making preparations to swarm, and after they have done this it is very hard to get them to begin work in the rections.

In preparing honey for market the first thing necessary is to see that it is carefully spread. Then it should be the retarded. If put on too late, the bees

A MAN FOR A RUBLE.

A Fronchman Wishes to Be Drawn For at 73 Cents a Chance.

These are the days of schemers! A Freuchman signing himself Comto de Olerico de St. Germain has written a letter to one of the St. Petersburg jour-nals proposing a lottery with himself as the prize. There are to be 1,000,000 chances, each ticket to cost one ruble Any young woman who wishes to pay that amount in the hope of becoming a countess is entitled to one chance. The one drawing the "lucky" number Count Clerico promises to marry and install as the chatelaine of his French chateau.

The proceeds of the lottery he pro-poses to divide as follows: Two hundred and fifty thousand rubles for himself. 250,600 for his bride, 250,000 for the journal which conducts the lottery and 250,000 for the poor of Russia. The count argues that this will be the lowest price—a ruble—ever paid by any woman for a bona fide title of countess.

He declares that he belongs to one of the cldest families in France, has a comfortable fortune, unimpeachable character and an unsullied name, and that he will furnish documentary proof of his claims. His fortune, however, he says, is not sufficient for him to live in the requisite fin de siecle style.

Some of the French papers have treated the proposition seriously and express the fear that the eddity of his proposal will attract some one willing to pay 1,000,000 rubles outright for him rather than the 1 ruble at which he estimates himself.-Kew York Tribune.

NOT DRESSED TO MARRY.

F. P. Watts of Pratt City, Ala., permaded Miss Martha Ann Harrison, who was visiting in his town, to go to Bir-mingham with him this morning to get married. The license was bought, the preacher obtained, and the inmates of the Victoria hotel, where the couple stopped, crowded the parlors to witness the ceremony.

At this juncture the young woman changed her mind and would not marry. Watts grew desperate, and drawing his pistol threw it in the girl's lap and told her to blow his brains out then and there. The girl handed back the pistol, but adhered to her intention to remain single awhile. The young man was so chagrined that he took the afternoon train for Texas to avoid being laughed

The girl's excuse was that she was not dressed well enough to get married. After the lover left, she drove home alone in his buggy.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

A Remarkable Achievement.

The cable dispatches announce that on Monday last Emperor William, with his own hands, pulled out the first loose tooth of tiny Prince Osear, and the latter is making a birthday present of it in a handsome casket to his govern-

Now think of that, ye daddies wh are not emperors and ye winsome kids who are not the children of emperors. His royal, imperial and majestic high ness pulled the first loose tooth of his 6-year-old son. He not only pulled the tooth, but did it with his hands. He didn't use the tongs, nor the tack hammer, nor the carpet stretcher, nor the churn dasher, nor the lawn mower, nor a plain cotton string, but did it with his own hands. -Atlanta Constitution
